EUGENE SYMPHONY FINANCES ECHO THE REST OF THE ARTS WORLD

Eugene is fortunate that Scott Freck spent the past 11 years in his home state working tirelessly as the executive director of the Eugene Symphony.

EW's headline announcing Freck's unexpected resignation ("Symphony Head Resigns," EW online 4/13) implied his departure was due to financial woes. The article mentions (some but not all) of Freck's reasons for leaving, then simultaneously discredits them, suggesting instead that "increasing financial concerns behind the scenes" may be the true cause.

EW credits two unnamed "insiders." The information these "insiders" have provided the EW is hardly newsworthy for anyone who follows the arts carefully. Arts attendance is down significantly post-COVID. Operating costs are up tremendously. Thankfully, the local impact on attendance is less than in many places. Still, the impact is real. And even with decent attendance, local costs of production have risen dramatically.

Many arts groups projected deficits across the county this year. Many will continue to do it for another year, maybe two. Guthrie Theatre Artistic Director Joseph Haj, who was rehearsing a play at Oregon Shakespeare Festival when COVID shut our state down, predicted that it would take arts organizations until 2025 to recover.

Eugene Symphony can withstand these deficits thanks to its history of strong leadership under Freck and his predecessors. And, in Freck's role as a board member for the Cultural Advocacy Coalition, he has fought hard to secure resources for other organizations.

Now is the time to be calling for increased support for the arts in our community and our state. And not for sensationalized reporting.

DON'T CUT ANIMAL SERVICES

I would like to respond to the story "Slashing Animal Services" in Eugene Weekly on April 20.

Many of us are very concerned about this 56 percent cut to animal welfare in the Eugene area. Laying off another officer to part-time duty would be very detrimental to animal welfare. With more folks moving to Oregon, and the fact that many lose their housing, the animals are the ones who suffer the consequence, by being abandoned, neglected or abused.

The Eugene/Springfield area is quite large, and since Springfield does not have a contract for cats, there are many, many there who need assistance also. It is very sad to even fathom such a cut to animal welfare.

I am asking the Eugene City Council, mayor and budget committee, to please reconsider this budget cut. People unfortunately will just start abandoning more and more cats as well as rabbits and guinea pigs.

TIME FOR A NEW SCHOOL BOARD

It's a good time for change. That is particularly true for the Eugene 4J School Board. Recent board meetings have been chaotic, charges have been flung and members are leaving. Five seats are turning over in one year. It's never been this bad.

It's no way to run a multi-million-dollar organization like the Eugene school district. Something has to change. Much of the problem has been poor meeting management and ignoring policy. That's a leadership problem. I taught in local schools for 40 years. I served two terms on the Lane Community College Board, twice as chair. It's not hard to spot weak management.

The election coming up May 16 will give voters a chance to effect that change. Much of the current board is leaving. The only incumbent up for re-election is Gordon Lafer, who served as vice-chair this past year during this dysfunction.

Some great replacements stand in the wings. Challenging the incumbent is Rick Hamilton, a youth volunteer, coach and former police officer who led diversity teams at his work and worked with underprivileged youth; a man who has endured yet risen above racial discrimination. Morgan Munro is a community leader; she served admirably as chair of the KLCC Foundation Board. She is running for open seat position 5. Long-time Eugene educator Tom DiLiberto is running for another open seat, position 1.

Voters will be deciding on a new board. Good candidates are ready to manage and lead. It's time to vote for change.

RICK HAMILTON CAN BRING CIVILITY AND RESPECT TO 4J BOARD

We are longtime Eugene residents who were proud to send our children to 4J schools. We believe the strength of 4J schools has been, in part, because the 4J board had a strong commitment to putting aside any political or philosophical differences and cooperating to find solutions that work for 4J students, teachers and administrators.

Recently, the 4J board seems to have lost sight of the need to put personalities aside and to keep the wellbeing of students and teachers foremost. We believe the board needs to return to the goal of reaching decisions through dialogue characterized by civility and respect for students, teachers, administrators and each other. That is why we strongly support Rick Hamilton for Position 4.

Hamilton's experience growing up in poverty, being the first in his family to go to college and, most of all, working with all types of youth in all types of settings from youth sports to incarcerated youth, gives him the understanding and empathy to help the board set policies that can reach across the district. We need board members who can listen and be part of the solution rather than contributing to the rancor and hostility that has become a hallmark of the current 4J board. We need board members who will manage the board's reserves carefully and conduct its work in public.

We urge everyone who shares these goals to vote for Hamilton for 4J Position 4.

HOW ABOUT HEALTH CARE THAT CARES?

The sudden, unexplained and unexpected announcement of the imminent closure of McKenzie Midwifery and Lactation Services two weeks ago has left many families, mothers and babies in our community scrambling to find new providers.

Our area is about to lose a safe, caring and effective healthcare service that serves those most in need. It is currently the only hospital-associated midwifery practice and has had extremely positive patient outcomes.

McKenzie Willamette Hospital and its new CEO David Butler are demonstrating in real time how individuals and future generations lose in a for-profit health care system.

If you want to be part of the growing protest of this injustice, check out SaveMidwives.com and follow us on social media @savemckenziemidwives.

Lane County Businessman Charged with Soliciting Hitman to Kill Wife

COTTAGE GROVE MAN HELD WITHOUT BAIL AFTER FORMER EMPLOYEE TOLD POLICE HE WAS OFFERED $10,000 IN MURDER PLOT TO STOP SPOUSE'S SPENDING ON HORSES. COURT RECORDS SAY HE HAD A MISTRESS.

By Charles Gearing

The website for Oregon West RV, a dealership next to I-5 in Creswell, features a slogan posted on revolving national park-themed backgrounds: "Our happy family, making your family happy."

At first glance, it could be true — a perfectly normal family life; a house in the country with horses and cars. A family business.

There is always more to the story.

In early February, the Cottage Grove Police Department was tipped to an alleged murder-for-hire scheme in which an owner of Oregon West RV asked an employee if he would shoot his wife, the co-owner of the business.

The tipster, Michael Goings, told police he was solicited by John Robert Clarke to murder his wife and RV business co-owner, court records show.

CGPD referred the case to the Lane County Sheriff's Department. At 2:30 pm Feb. 7, Lane County deputies arrested Clarke, 58, on charges of solicitation of murder. He was later also charged with attempted murder and is being held without bail at the Lane County Jail. His trial is scheduled for this summer.

Clarke's wife took to Facebook on Feb. 9, in a post that has since been deleted.

"Catastrophic choices caused [John] to spiral into mental and emotional meltdown, to a point of them being unrecognizable to you," she wrote. "38 years are gone in a moment when you realize the person you have loved your whole adult life, is willing to end your life, and destroy everyone around them to accomplish their demon's goal."

In October 2022 she posted on Facebook about a disturbing incident that involved her husband. She wrote that she had awakened in the hospital from a coma after she had been working outside with her Clarke at the couple's riverfront home and somehow fell into the water. "I had a pretty catastrophic accident," she wrote. "John Clarke and I were working in the yard, he went in the house for a moment, and came back to find me floating, face down in the river. Needless to say, I aspirated river water, and had some head, neck, and rib trauma, from the fall, and resulting CPR." She said in the post she had no memory of the event or the days before it, but concluded, "My husband John Clarke has, once again, saved my life!"

She filed for divorce on Feb. 14, Valentine's Day. The petition for dissolution states that "irreconcilable differences between the parties have caused the irremediable breakdown of their marriage." Eugene Weekly reached out to her and her lawyer for comment via Facebook, by email and by telephone but didn't receive a response.

At a Feb. 28 detention hearing, Clarke wore navy blue jailhouse joggers with rubber slides. He appeared exhausted and disheveled. His voice was gravely, struggling to crack out short, yet polite yes's and no's. Clarke wasn't required to address the courtroom at length, only speaking to waive his right to a speedy trial and to agree to remain in custody until his trial date when prompted by Judge Kamala Shugar.

Clarke's motive for the alleged attempt is described in court filings. Documents indicate Clarke explained to Goings, the intended hitman, that his wife wanted to buy at least one "million-dollar horse," and this was "a concern to him, his business, the inheritance his children would get, and may cause 26 of his employees to lose their jobs."

Clarke later told deputies that his wife was buying a horse worth $65,000.

Goings also told investigators Clarke said he could not divorce her because she owned half the business. Clarke's wife is listed as both the registered agent and president of Oregon West RV, according to the Oregon Business Registry. Clarke himself is listed as the secretary. Files from the ongoing dissolution case state that Clarke's wife will seek "100 percent of the business."

Officials discovered "a mistress" in his text conversations, the court documents say. Clarke later admitted to the affair, of which his wife was unaware.

Goings walked deputies through a chain of events leading to when he was allegedly propositioned by Clarke to commit the murder of his wife. According to the affidavit of probable cause, Goings told them that Clarke had asked to have a face-to-face meeting.

Text messages include Goings asking about the nature of the meeting. Clarke replied that it was about "a project."

At the beginning of their meeting, Clarke asked for Goings' smartwatch and cell phone. Goings obliged, despite feeling "odd" about the request; Clarke put both men's electronics in a safe, Goings told investigators.

Clarke then asked what Goings would do for $10,000, adding something to the effect of, "Would you off someone for 10 grand?"

Goings, playing along with what he thought was a joke, replied "Sure." Clarke then doubled down, asking if he would kill someone he knew and made clear that he meant his wife. Goings did not decline the proposition.

After being confronted with a number of statements he made corroborating Goings' account, Clarke admitted that he had made the statements that Goings had described to law enforcement.

He asked if Goings would "off" someone for $10,000, and then asked about killing his wife for $20,000.

Goings told law enforcement that Clarke showed him three rifles located at Clarke's business in Creswell, as well as envelopes Clarke claimed held $10,000. Goings described to police officers that at least one of the rifles was a .45 caliber lever action. He also said there was a peep sight on one of the weapons.

Clarke appeared at Goings' residence, unannounced, and requested to meet at Clarke's home two days later to "look at the house." Goings told law enforcement that Clarke said he had a "bug-detector," which he would use to ensure the security of the meeting.

An investigator later contacted Clarke, who confirmed that he had met with Goings at his office. He also confirmed that he had shown Goings the guns, but denied that he had taken his electronics during their meeting. When asked about the bug detector, Clarke said that he had recently purchased such a device.

The trial is scheduled to begin July 11 in front of a 12-person jury.

In Oregon, attempted murder and solicitation of murder are both Class A felonies punishable by up to 20 years in prison.

"If you are still reading this, thank you, and please, go hug someone you love," Clarke's wife wrote on her Facebook page last October. "Life can change drastically in the blink of an eye!" ■

• The May special election is nigh — or at the very least your ballots are mailed this week. So stay tuned for our election endorsements in the May 4 issue. We've been watching forums, interviewing candidates and researching positions and backgrounds in several of the upcoming races. We can't check out every candidate for every school board race, so if you have strong feelings about a school board candidate in these turbulent times, send a letter to Letters@EugeneWeekly.com.

• An email went out to the Lane Community College community from President Stephanie Bulger that the school is recommending to the LCC Board of Education that the school's Health Clinic "operations cease effective with the end of the Fall 2023 term." She writes that the clinic is running an annual deficit of approximately $260,000, and that somehow the school can both close the clinic and expand health care. Currently, students pay $45 a term for as many visits as they need — as opposed to paying a copay each visit elsewhere. Maybe the school could first do a better job getting the word out about the health care they can access? Looks like a big topic for candidates in the upcoming LCC board elections to weigh in on.

• By all accounts the Earth Day rally in downtown Eugene had excellent turnout, fascinating

If you missed the Earth Day rally and march, we hear from Extinction Rebellion Justice Eugene that at 10 am Saturday, April 29, near Free Speech Plaza, across from Saturday Market, there will be another Earth-oriented event.

• We hear from a local nursery operator that planting season is about four weeks behind normal this year. But things are looking up. This week we have temperature forecasts of 85 and 77 degrees. Runners hit the road for the Eugene marathon and half marathon Sunday, April 30. Spring must really be here because even the freaking wasps are getting frisky.

• Jameson T. Auten, general manager and CEO of Lane Transit District, spoke to the City Club of Eugene April 21. He was impressive. He said LTD has a "very strong national reputation, and with 330 employees it runs 30 bus routes. Calling "public transportation more than just a ride," Auten said they are always exploring how to better communicate with the community and how to be more transparent. He was asked about letting leashed dogs ride and whether buses should run on holidays. Enjoying Old Growth

CLIMATE ACTION BEGINS WITH A HIKE AT BRICE CREEK By Chandra LeGue

Come for the waterfalls or swimming holes, to camp or to hike. Come to explore one of the nicest streams and most accessible ancient forests near Eugene. Just 30 minutes outside of Cottage Grove, Brice Creek is a wonderful low-elevation destination all year long.

The forests that surround this streamside trail were spared the extensive logging and road building that has plagued nearby parts of the Umpqua National Forest and Bureau of Land Management lands for decades. That means that the mix of Douglas-fir, western hemlock, western redcedar, Pacific yew, incense cedar and madrone that grow on the fertile soils along Brice Creek and on the warm hillslopes that rise above it have been growing naturally for hundreds of years. Much of the forest originated after a fire 200(-ish) years ago, but in places you can find huge, fire-scarred Douglas-fir trees that survived from centuries before.

Forests like these are rare and offer a million reasons we might want to protect them. They filter clean water; provide homes for myriad wildlife on the ground, in the water and in the trees; and, perhaps most importantly, they also happen to be one of the most effective climate solutions available to us, soaking up and storing carbon from the atmosphere and storing it for centuries — if they are allowed to continue living. Other than general guidance to protect habitat and streams, there are no specific protections from logging in this forest area. Without such durable protections here and in other old forests, these important ecosystems may still be at risk.

There are plenty of hike options from the two trailheads — the lower one at Cedar Creek Campground trailhead, and the upper at the Champion Creek Trailhead. To get there from Eugene, drive I-5 south to Cottage Grove exit 174. Head east on Row River Road, staying on the south side of Dorena Lake. About 17 miles from the freeway, stay right at a Y intersection onto Brice Creek Road (Forest Road 22) and proceed another 4.5 miles to find the lower trailhead. The upper trailhead is another 3.5 miles past Cedar Creek, with a parking area on the left. The trail starts on the left just over the bridge.

OPTION 1: Out and back from Cedar Creek trailhead (up to 5 miles)

Cross the footbridge over Brice Creek and turn right on the trail. Amble as far as you like: It's 2.5 miles from here to one of the nicest stands of old forest, and along the way are some of the best known swimming holes and rock formations, if swimming beckons.

OPTION 2: Out and back from Champion Creek trailhead and to Lower Trestle Creek Falls (3 to 4 miles)

Turn left on the trail to follow Brice Creek downstream through the lush forest. Just past a bridge over Trestle Creek, take the side trail to the right to go to Lower Trestle Creek Falls. This 0.3-mile trail gains a bit of elevation as it goes up a lush canyon to the hundred-foot waterfall nestled in its recesses.

On the main trail, continue downstream through a beautiful cathedral-like old-growth forest grove. A half mile from the Lower Trail, you'll intersect the Upper Trestle Creek Falls Trail. (See Option 3) Pass this trail and continue another half mile or so to another section of stellar old growth, or turn around at any point.

OPTION 3: Upper Trestle Creek Falls loop (3.5 miles)

Start in the same way as Option 2, but turn right on the Upper Trestle Creek Falls trail to do the loop. This gains some elevation, making it more difficult, but you are rewarded with a dryer forested hillslope and a walk-behind waterfall in a mossy grotto before descending back to the upper trailhead.

OPTION 4: Shuttle hike (if you've got more than one car) from the upper to lower trailheads (4.5 miles one way, or add on either waterfall)

Forests like these need your support so they can continue to serve as a natural climate solution, filter water and make Oregon such a great place to live and enjoy. Whatever hike option you choose, please take a moment to add your voice of support for protections for the few remaining mature and old-growth forests and pristine rivers — like these — on our public lands. The Biden administration is currently offering a momentous opportunity to comment on policy to protect old forests across the country. More at OregonWild.org. ■

Spring for the Redwoods

HEAD DOWN TO THE CALIFORNIA COAST FOR TALL TREE HIKES By William L. Sullivan

Get the jump on summer with a spring fling to California's Redwood Coast. The season there is now in full sprout, but the crowds haven't yet arrived, so you can get campground reservations, and hiking trails don't yet require permits.

Here's my recommendation for a getaway: Visit the recently rediscovered Grove of Titans on a spectacular steel walkway. Then sneak into Fern Canyon's slot-like gorge before the reservation system starts.

Some of California's best redwood groves were rescued as state parks in the 1920s. In 1963, the world's tallest trees were discovered just outside the state parks, in an unprotected grove on Redwood Creek. Outrage over plans to log those trees led to the creation of Redwood National Park, a 50-mile-long strip of coastal land. Today the old state parks are surrounded by this long, narrow national park like Christmas presents in a tube sock.

Although Native people of the Tolowa Dee-Ni' Nation have known about the largest trees for ages, impressive groves are still being "discovered" by the outside world. Researchers from Humboldt State University failed to notice the Grove of Titans until 1998. After the grove became an internet sensation, the Save the Redwoods League partnered with Jedediah Smith State Park to keep crowds from trampling the soft ground near the largest trees. Although redwoods seem mighty, their roots are shallow and fragile. Hurting the roots weakens the entire tree.

The trail that opened to the Grove of Titans in 2022 is an engineering marvel, with a quarter mile of raised steel walkways.

Part of the fun of this trip is discovering Howland Hill Road, the rugged dirt track that meanders through giant groves to the trailhead. To find it from Crescent City, drive Highway 199 toward Grants Pass 11 miles. Beyond the Jedediah Smith park information center two miles, turn right on South Fork Road for half a mile. Just beyond a bridge, fork right on what becomes Howland Hill Road.

After 2.3 miles on Howland Hill you'll pass a turnoff for the Stout Grove, another famous stand of giants. But to see the titans, continue 1.4 miles on potholed Howland Hill Road. Beyond a Mill Creek bridge, park as near as you can to a restroom on the left near the poorly marked trailhead for the Grove of Titans. Parking is tight, so you may have to drive a bit to find a pullout with space.

The trail starts 100 feet north of the restroom at a "Mill Creek Trail" sign. The path climbs through a great, ferny rainforest where redwoods tower above delicate white spring wildflowers: stalks of wild lily-of-the-valley, shamrock-leaved oxalis and big, triple-leaved trillium.

After 0.7 miles you'll reach the start of the raised steel walkway. Keep left at junctions for 0.1 miles to the turnaround loop at the Grove of Titans. On the way back, keep left again to find a creek bridge for the Mill Creek Trail (turn back here to stay on the walkway), and a Mill Creek viewpoint before returning to your car.

The next hike I'm going to recommend, to Fern Canyon, is so popular that in the summer only 55 trailhead parking permits are issued a day. Before May 1, however, the only limitation is whether you want to pay $12, drive through a six-inch-deep creek, and wade up a watery slot canyon.

The Fern Canyon trail is on traditional Yurok land. On the drive south you'll pass Yurok casinos along the Klamath River. You may also see a symbol of the tribe's growing influence flying overhead.

The Yuroks have made a priority of reintroducing California condors. In 2022 six of the gigantic scavengers were released here, near the mouth of the Klamath River. With 9-foot wingspans, condors can easily soar 100 miles in search of carrion. The official range for the new birds includes all of Oregon, as far north as the Columbia River.

Big though they are, condors are unable to kill even a mouse. They rely on predators — historically, wolves — to leave carcasses for them to finish off. One of the condors' modern threats is lead poisoning from the bullets left in dead or wounded animals. Lead ammunition has been banned in some parts of the scavengers' range, but not yet in Oregon.

Fern Canyon is in Prairie Creek Redwoods State Park, 30 miles south of Crescent City. Hwy 101 detours around the state park, but it's not really longer to drive through on the Drury Parkway, a road lined with big redwoods.

After driving 9 miles on the parkway, stop at the Elk Prairie Visitor Center, beside a campground entrance on the right. Some people prefer to start the hike to Fern Canyon here, although it's a 10-mile round trip, because this longer route never requires a permit. Parking at the visitor center has a 30-minute limit, but if you drive on 0.1 miles toward the picnic area there are spots where you can park all day.

If you're ready for a 10-mile hike, set out from a big trailhead signboard 100 feet from the visitor center and follow signs for the James Irvine Trail 4.3 miles to the Fern Canyon loop. On your hike back you might return via the Clintonia and Miner's Ridge trails through some of the park's grandest redwood groves.

To find closer trailheads for Fern Canyon, drive the Drury Parkway south from the visitor center one mile, continue south on Hwy 101 for 2.2 miles, and turn right on Davison Road. After just 0.4 miles, this becomes a one-lane gravel road closed to trailers and motorhomes over 24 feet long. After 3.4 miles there's a fee booth where you have to pay $12 in cash or by check — not by card. From May 1 to Sept. 30, the rangers here check that you have printed out a copy of your required reservation, which must be acquired online at RedwoodParksConservancy.org no later than noon the day before your visit.

Two miles beyond the fee booth is the Gold Bluffs Beach parking area, where you could park and walk the road ahead one mile. If you drive onward through the creek ford, note that this final mile of the road is gated closed half an hour after sunset. At road's end, the Fern Canyon trail continues straight 0.2 miles to Home Creek. Wade up the creek through the canyon 0.4 miles, where steps climb up to the left to a T-shaped junction with the James Irvine Trail. For the shortest loop, turn left to return to your car. If you have more time, turn right for 1.5 miles and then keep right on the Clintonia and Miner's Ridge trails to hike through colossal redwood groves back to the ford at Gold Bluffs Beach.

The scientific name for the redwood species is Sequoia sempervirens — always living. Even when a redwood is cut, a circle of shoots will sprout from the stump. A spring trip to the Redwood Coast can be a lesson in resilience. The giant trees don't die easy. ■

Another Eugene Marathon is upon us, another chance for running enthusiasts in the area to test their training over a 26.2-mile course that starts and finishes at Hayward Field, and organizers are gearing up for a three-day weekend of activities. Beyond the marathon and half-marathon (13.1 miles), there will be a Health and Wellness Expo at the Graduate Eugene hotel on Friday and the 5th Street Alley Marketplace as well as a meet and greet with author and Boston Marathon champion Des Linden on race day. Vehicle traffic might be full of twists and turns on race day, and LTD announced on its website (LTD.org) that service on neighborhood routes 11, 17, 18, 28 and 98, along with EmX on Franklin Boulevard, will be detoured, and some stops will be missed Sunday between 7 am and 11 am. If you do make it to the race, the best place to salute the runners on Sunday might well be on Agate Street north of the stadium. Hayward Field will be in sight for that final push, so the motivation to finish strong will be there, but fans should line up to cheer as well. And be sure to bring a cowbell.

The starting gun fires for the Eugene Marathon 7 am Sunday, April 30, at Hayward Field at the University of Oregon. The finish also is at Hayward Field, and a course map can be found at EugeneMarathon.com. The Health and Wellness Expo is 1 pm to 6 pm Friday, April 28, at the Graduate Eugene, 66 E. 6th Ave., and 10 am to 6 pm Saturday, April 29, at the 5th Street Alley Marketplace. Also on Sunday, Des Linden, author of Choosing to Run: A Memoir, will sign copies at $29 per book inside the Tsunami Books tent at Hayward Field, 11 am to 2 pm. Pre-order for a signed copy at TsunamiBooks.org. — Dan Buckwalter

Sinners Repent!

PORTLAND DARK FOLK-PUNK QUINTET THE BRIDGE CITY SINNERS BRING THEIR Y'ALL-TERNATIVE SOUND TO THE WOW HALL

By Will Kennedy

Libby Lux, singer with Portland acoustic-punk string band The Bridge City Sinners, has a clipping from Eugene Weekly in her scrapbook.

It was around 2010, and Lux lived in Eugene at that time, busking on the corner of Broadway and Olive downtown. Her duo, Bloodbath Burlesque Orchestra, opened for Reverend Peyton's Big Damn Band at WOW Hall, and EW covered it. It was her first real taste of fame, Lux says of the article. "I cut it out," and she kept it.

Lux returns to Eugene, and EW, behind The Bridge City Sinners 2021 release Unholy Hymns, playing WOW Hall on May 4.

Unholy Hymns blends the intensity of punk rock with the dark theatricality of metal and the traditional string band arrangements of bluegrass, folk, hillbilly and pre-war jazz.

Released on the Portland independent label Flail Records, Unholy Hymns charted in the Billboard 100 Top Current Album Sales for the month of September the year it came out.

"We were right under Now That's What I Call Country Volume 14," a serialized compendium of best selling pop country radio singles. "That's a win," Lux says in a phone interview.

Raised in Corvallis, Lux bounced around the Willamette Valley before settling up north. In addition to singing and co-writing songs for the Sinners, and in keeping with her group's medley of different sounds and styles, she often plays a hybrid banjo and ukulele instrument called a banjolele: same tuning as a ukulele, just more twang, Lux adds.

"Playing the ukulele professionally, a lot of ukuleles are garbage. They're children's toys. It's hard in the ukulele world," Lux says. Most often, with a banjolele, "it's going to be a quality instrument."

As a teenager, Lux was a punk rock disciple, and was only introduced to old-time, hillbilly and bluegrass music — like many others of her generation — through the O Brother, Where Art Thou? movie soundtrack, the 2000 Coen Brothers film that helped revive interest in those Americana music styles.

"I grew up in the punk rock scene. There was no other type of music. Nothing but punk rock runs in my veins," Lux says.

When she heard the O Brother soundtrack, though, she thought, "This shit slaps. This is great! It opened my mind," Lux explains.

Like her other musical projects, Sinners got its start busking on street corners. Those experiences have taught Lux some lessons she carries forward into other venues. "You have to demand people's attention," she says of her role as a singer, but that's the fun part. "Where else do I get to be a spooky monster?"

In addition to touring, the Sinners are already at work on an Unholy Hymns follow-up, with a possible 2024 release date. It will continue their interests in blues music's hellfire and brimstone sensibility, metal's interest in the occult and profane and punk rock's aggression, filtered as always through traditional string band arrangements, a sound the group calls "y'all-ternative."

This time, though, there might be more "Old West" saloon-style piano, Lux adds. "It's coming out very theatrical. We're leaning into spooky musical theater."

On the first date of a tour that will take the group across Canada and into the East Coast, The Bridge City Sinners perform with Playboy Manbaby and Beggars Canyon 8 pm Thursday, May 4, at WOW Hall; $20 advance, $25 door, all-ages.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19): According to a study by Newsweek magazine, 58 percent of us yearn to experience spiritual growth; 33 percent report having had a mystical or spiritual experience; 20 percent of us say we have had a revelation from God in the last year; and 13 percent have been in the presence of an angel. Given the astrological omens currently in play for you Aries, I suspect you will exceed all those percentages in the coming weeks. I hope you will make excellent use of your sacred encounters. What two areas of your life could most benefit from a dose of divine assistance or intervention? There's never been a better time than now to seek a Deus ex machina. (More info: <https://tinyurl.com/GodIntercession>)

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): After the fall of the Roman Empire, political cohesion in its old territories was scarce for hundreds of years. Then a leader named Charlemagne (747-814) came along and united much of what we now call Western Europe. He was unusual in many respects. For example, he sought to master the arts of reading and writing. Most other rulers of his time regarded those as paltry skills that were beneath their dignity. I mention this fact, Taurus, because I suspect it's a propitious time to consider learning things you have previously regarded as unnecessary or irrelevant or outside your purview. What might these abilities be?

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): I'm turning this horoscope over to Nigerian poet Ijeoma Umebinyuo. She has three messages that are just what you need to hear right now. 1. "Start now. Start where you are. Start with fear. Start with pain. Start with doubt. Start with hands shaking. Start with voice trembling but start. Start and don't stop. Start where you are, with what you have." 2. "You must let the pain visit. You must allow it to teach you. But you must not allow it to overstay." 3. "Write a poem for your 14-year-old self. Forgive her. Heal her. Free her."

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): Historical records tell us that Chinese Emperor Hungwu (1328-1398) periodically dealt with overwhelming amounts of decision-making. During one 10-day phase of his reign, for example, he was called on to approve 1,660 documents concerning 3,391 separate issues. Based on my interpretation of the planetary omens, I suspect you may soon be called on to deal with a similar outpouring. This might tempt you toward over-stressed reactions like irritation and self-medication. But I hope you'll strive to handle it all with dignity and grace. In fact, that's what I predict you will do. In my estimation, you will be able to summon the extra poise and patience to manage the intensity.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): Is it even possible for us humans to live without fear — if even for short grace periods? Could you or I or anyone else somehow manage to celebrate, say, 72 hours of freedom from all worries and anxieties and trepidations? I suspect the answer is no. We may aspire to declare our independence from dread, but 200,000 years of evolution ensures that our brains are hard-wired to be ever-alert for danger. Having provided that perspective, however, I will speculate that if anyone could approach a state of utter dauntlessness, it will be you Leos in the next three weeks. This may be as close as you will ever come to an extended phase of bold, plucky audacity.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): "Dear Sunny Bright Cheery Upbeat Astrologer: You give us too many sunny, bright, cheery, upbeat predictions. They lift my mood when I first read them, but later I'm like, "What the hell?" Because yeah, they come true, but they usually cause some complications I didn't foresee. Maybe you should try offering predictions that bum me out, since then I won't have to deal with making such big adjustments. — Virgo Who is Weary of Rosy Hopeful Chirpy Horoscopes." Dear Virgo: You have alluded to a key truth about reality: Good changes often require as much modification and adaptation as challenging changes. Another truth: One of my specialties is helping my readers manage those good changes. And by the way, I predict the next two weeks will deliver a wealth of interesting and buoyant changes.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): Poet Pablo Neruda wrote, "Let us look for secret things somewhere in the world on the blue shores of silence." That might serve as a good motto for you in the coming weeks. By my astrological reckoning, you'll be wise to go in quest for what's secret, concealed, and buried. You will generate fortuitous karma by smoking out hidden agendas and investigating the rest of the story beneath the apparent story. Be politely pushy, Libra. Charmingly but aggressively find the missing information and the shrouded rationales. Dig as deep as you need to go to explore the truth's roots.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): We've all done things that make perfect sense to us, though they might look nonsensical or inexplicable to an outside observer. Keep this fact in your awareness during the next two weeks, Scorpio. Just as you wouldn't want to be judged by uninformed people who don't know the context of your actions, you should extend this same courtesy to others, especially now. At least some of what may appear nonsensical or inexplicable will be serving a valuable purpose. Be slow to judge. Be inclined to offer the benefit of the doubt.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): I completely understand if you feel some outrage about the lack of passion and excellence you see in the world around you. You have a right to be impatient with the laziness and carelessness of others. But I hope you will find ways to express your disapproval constructively. The best approach will be to keep criticism to a minimum and instead focus on generating improvements. For the sake of your mental health, I suggest you transmute your anger into creativity. You now have an enhanced power to reshape the environments and situations you are part of so they work better for everyone.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): In the 17th century, renowned Capricorn church leader James Ussher announced he had discovered when the world had been created. It was at 6 pm on October 22 in the year 4004 BCE. From this spectacularly wrong extrapolation, we might conclude that not all Capricorns are paragons of logic and sound analysis 100 percent of the time. I say we regard this as a liberating thought for you in the coming weeks. According to my analysis, it will be a favorable time to indulge in wild dreams, outlandish fantasies and imaginative speculations. Have fun, dear Capricorn, as you wander out in the places that singer Tom Petty referred to as "The Great Wide Open."

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): We often evaluate prospects quantitatively: how big a portion do we get, how much does something cost, how many social media friends can we add? Quantity does matter in some cases, but on other occasions may be trumped by quality. A few close, trustworthy friends may matter more than hundreds of Instagram friends we barely know. A potential house may be spacious and affordable, but be in a location we wouldn't enjoy living in. Your project in the coming weeks, Aquarius, is to examine areas of your life that you evaluate quantitatively and determine whether there are qualitative aspects neglected in your calculations.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): "Dear Dr. Astrology: Help! I want to know which way to go. Should I do the good thing or the right thing? Should I be kind and sympathetic at the risk of ignoring my selfish needs? Or should I be a pushy stickler for what's fair and true, even if I look like a preachy grouch? Why is it so arduous to have integrity? — Pinched Pisces." Dear Pisces: Can you figure out how to be half-good and half-right? Half-self-interested and half-generous? I suspect that will generate the most gracious, constructive results.

SAVAGE LOVE

BY DAN SAVAGE

I have been involved in a long distance situationship (intimate friends) for three years. We live in different states. We met in person, then became friends online, and that is where the relationship blossomed. I went to visit her once for a week, and it was a very intimate and fun experience for both of us, although she did mention while I was there that she noticed my body order. I took care of that ASAP, and it didn't seem like a big deal, and it only seemed to come up when she was angry or frustrated about something. We have been planning on another visit, but she keeps bringing up my BO problem and has even said, "If it's as bad as it was last time, you have to get a hotel room and can't stay with me, and I won't kiss you or fuck you." Which is confusing because we were very intimate last time, she seemed to be enjoying herself quite a bit, and she even told me how much she enjoyed the sex for weeks afterward. This issue arose months after that visit. Should I take her advice and be super diligent about BO or is this some sort of emotional manipulation or gaslighting? My close friends tell me they never notice my body odor — they don't get as close to me, of course, because I'm not fucking them — and I shower at least once daily and use deodorant every day and brush my teeth multiple times a day. I realize I have BO sometimes, but I take care of it when I do. Also, and here's the dinger, she has untreated BPD.

— Oddly Disrespectful Odor Request

That's quite the dinger you dropped there at the end of your letter, ODOR.

Adults with untreated and severe BPD — bipolar disorder — sometimes experience olfactory hallucinations, i.e., they sometimes smell things that aren't there, in addition to sometimes seeing things that aren't there and hearing things that aren't there. Some studies have shown that olfactory hallucinations are more common than auditory ones — again, among adults with untreated and severe cases of BPD.

Now, I don't know whether your fuckbuddy is experiencing olfactory hallucinations. I don't even know if fuckbuddy has BPD. I don't know why anyone would lie about something like that, but this woman's behavior seems kind of erratic — itself a symptom of BPD — and people lie about things they shouldn't all the time. But I do know, and can say with some certainty, that no one who's as diligent about his personal hygiene as you claim to be, ODOR, is walking around with terrible BO. You have a scent, of course; all people do. And once in a while someone is gonna be turned off by your natural, baseline, freshly showered scent for reasons that can't be explained. If that was the case here — if it was just one of those chemical things, just one of those hormonal things, just one of those pheromonal things — then you didn't do anything wrong, ODOR, and you can't do anything about it.

Of course, it's possible you're lying to me about your personal hygiene, ODOR, and it's possible your friends are lying to you about your BO. It's also possible this woman didn't feel safe being honest with you when you visited her — when you were standing there in her apartment, stinking the place up — and she pretended that shower solved the BO problem and pretended to enjoy the sex because she was worried you would react badly if she was honest with you about how unhappy she was. But if that was the case, ODOR — if you really smelled that bad — why would she make plans to see you again? If your body odor was really that bad, if you smell so bad she has to threaten you in advance with getting a hotel room, why would she want to fuck you again?

Only she knows the answer to those questions, ODOR, so here's one you can answer: Why do you wanna see this woman again? BPD or no BPD, she doesn't seem... like a very nice person. Decades ago, I might've said, "Don't stick your dick in crazy," but that expression is ableist, first and foremost, and it has a long history of being used to control women. For fear of being labeled "crazy," and therefore unworthy of having some random guy's dick stuck in her, countless women were manipulated into putting up with terrible behavior, from poor personal hygiene to unsatisfying sex, to much worse.

So, I'm not using that awful expression — I'm mentioning it, not using it (angry readers are invited to Google "use/mention distinction") — but I would like to revise it: Don't stick your dick in unkindness. And whatever else is going on with this woman, she's being unkind to you. Tell her she's going to need that hotel room after all, ODOR, because you won't be available to see her — and be insulted by her — when she comes to town.
